

Search

alt.lasik-eyes > The Dangers of LASIK

From: Trulytelling@yahoo.com - view profile
Date: Sat, Apr 29 2006 10:56 am
Email: Trulytelling@yahoo.com
Groups: alt.lasik-eyes

Fixed font - Proportional font
show options

A woman had LASIK at Duke University Medical Center. All was fine and she was happy for about 5 years... when she noticed her vision was deteriorating. She returned for an exam and was told she could not have an enhancement. Over the next several years she noticed her vision was deteriorating even more and that she was developing severe dry eye. She returned to Duke. She overheard her Duke doctor in the next room discussing her case and mentioning 'ectasia' but he wouldn't admit it when she confronted him with her husband. She is now being treated by another doctor elsewhere for dry eye and ectasia. Her new doctor mentioned that she may need corneal transplants because of the thinning and subsequent bulging of her cornea caused by LASIK. She claims the last year of her life has been absolute hell because of her eyes.

This real, wonderful woman is an example of why your LASIK satire isn't amusing, Ryan, and why false patient advocates are despicable.

Reply